

Cyber Security - It Could Happen to You!

Many people hear in the news about major corporations having computer hackers infiltrate their system and lift personal data from it, such as credit card numbers, social security numbers or the like. What is interesting to note that even though these major corporations have “robust” cyber security programs, breaches still occur. What is also noteworthy is that the trend to hack smaller businesses, i.e. “Mom and Pop” businesses are becoming more the norm. The reason is clear: most smaller companies do not have the resources and capital to implement sophisticated cyber security programs on the level of some of the Fortune 500 companies.

As a smaller business owner, one could chose to ignore the threat and pretend it could “never happen to me” or you can take prudent steps to implement sound anti-hacking programs as well as purchase a comprehensive Cyber Liability policy to help prevent the potential large economic fall out of a serious security breach.
